Hollow Richard P. Denney
Welcome to the house of Hollow.

In a dystopian future, sixteen year old Leah Munro has been sold to a rich woman in a crippling mansion. Soon Leah discovers that there is something mysterious going on around the home, and with the help of three other girls, she attempts to uncover what is truly happening... what lies beyond all of the plexiglass windows and the hideous screams in the middle of the night? Leah will soon find out.

Ria says

Well, that was fun.

I only have two complaints (and yes, they're both worth a star since they're kinda big).

First: Leah reminds me of Zoey Redbird from Marked. That's not a good thing. Zoey has a habit of complaining about just about everything in sight, and sometimes stopping the story to complain about something in particular (or to say how nondiscriminatory and tolerant and unprejudiced she is). Leah tones that down a bit, but still.

On her trip to Cordelia's mansion, Leah runs into a bodyguard. She's looking at the girl (and describing the clothing in great detail) when the girl (not so politely, I'll admit) tells her to "stop gawking." So apparently, telling someone to stop staring at you is because the next thing Leah says is "What a bitch."

So sometime in the future, a girl who doesn't want someone to stare at her either has to live through it or get called a bitch. Lovely.

Not to mention that her only friend is a test-tube baby (which is somewhere between inferior and abomination in this society). She even points out that she didn't care about his status, and they're great friends.

Just skip to the great friends part. If she has been friends with him for as long as she says, that probably wouldn't come to mind whenever they meet up.

Also, Cordelia's butler is blind (and homosexual). Both facts are given on the same page. Oh look, Leah doesn't care if he's blind, he's still attractive! Oh look, Leah knows another homosexual guy, he was nice! And liked pink! And complimented her fashion sense!

No, I didn't like Leah much.

Second: The worldbuilding was incomplete. Why did the world become okay with slavery again? This is partially excused since this is pretty much the first draft, although it bothered me anyway.

I guess that's it.

But why has nobody finished this through fanfiction???

Sally says

I just read the excerpt that's available to be read here on Goodreads, and I am definitely interested to read the whole book when it's released! :D One to keep an eye out for.

At first it sounded like a bad unwise choice to read a manuscript which will never be published, but knowing that I read it. And it was something new and refreshing unlike all the repeated ideas and similar plots in the recent YA releases. It was interesting from the first chapter, but it definitely made me very excited and thrilled by the time I reached Chapter 3. The writer has a good writing style and the flow smoothly develops making the reader so engrossed in the story. I think it's a really good material for a novel...>.> Exciting, thrilling, and catching...

oooooooooooookay... blurb's non-descriptive, but the cover's beautiful. but what makes me decide to add this on my to-read shelf? the title.. i'm kind of a sucker for one-word titles :D

Georgia says

Please, Please, Please Finish this book

At first I was hesitant, first chapter didn't really capture my interest but the book just keeps getting better the more that I read...

PLEASE FINISH!!!

It ended on such a cliffhanger and I need to know what happens.

Lorena says

Oh well... since it's not going to be released I decided to read the manuscript and wow, it really got me, I mean the beginning was quite awkward but everything got interesting when Leah arrived at the manor, this manuscript seriously has an amazing potential to be an amazing book, something is definitely off in that manor and what about the creepy raven? I mean what kind of old lady that likes to play mommy has a raven as a pet? urgh and I'm pretty sure Chloe knows something and that Violet is just as crazy as this Cordelia lady... oh well I guess I'll never ~~or at least not~~ ~~it~~ ~~a~~ ~~near~~ ~~future~~ know what will happen with Leah, the ghost and the girls.

I hope the author can fall in love with this novel and decides to finish and publish it, if I fell in love with the manuscript I'm sure the book would become one of my top favorites.

Devon says

I probably shouldn't have started this knowing it was never going to be finished-now I want to know how it ends.

It was pretty good for an unedited manuscript. I would have liked to have read the real thing.

Richard Denney. That is all.

?eah ♡ε??♡ says

SHE HAS MY NAME! This is the first book I've ever seen with the main character having my name... sad I know.

Emily says

Well. That was interesting. So basically, the author decided he wasn't going to publish the book for personal reasons, and released the unedited manuscript if people wanted to read it. Out of pure curiosity I read all 107 pages of it, and it was...meh. Decent, I suppose, considering he hadn't edited it fully. There was definitely things that I could see being changed had the manuscript been (the grammatical errors drove me CRAZY). I really would've liked to see the final polished product because honestly, this is a very cool, unique concept.
