Jessica says

The concept of the book is a good one (that we should apologize when we hurt/bother others) though I do think it could be better. However, my son giggles the whole time we read it so I guess he loves it!

Krissy says

okay - i might read again

Mouse!

As an independent read for a 6 year old it was confusing until the end why mouse was rushing around, but we loved the story and expressions of mouse.

Mouse says sorry is a different type of children's book that brings in a view not seen as much in literature, courtesy and manners. It teaches children to respect other people, their time and property. Each page brings about a different concern and consequence that Mouse has to deal with. There is lots of color, large pictures and it introduces children to different animals. The book starts with Mouse racing towards something unknown to the reader. Mouse first runs through a pile of mud and ends up splashing the mud all over some bystanders having to apologize. It further steps on a painting with the muddy feet, knocks over a squirrel's nuts and has to apologize to all of them. Mouse ends up in the last page at the dinner table telling its mom sorry for being late but they had hurried. I highly recommend it as a simple read that you don't get to see much.

I loved this series. I wanted all of the books red over and over again. I loved the big, bright illustrations. This book helped me while I was learning the sign language for sorry.

I'm all for books to help teach good manners, and certainly this one provided plenty of examples of when an apology is appropriate. But we don't see anything besides a yelled "sorry!" as Mouse rushes by. There's no other consequence to Mouse's actions. So I'm not thrilled.

Simon says

Meh. It was a bit too repetitive and I'm not sure what the lesson was supposed to be.

Sara ♥ says

This one is super cute and it's easy for my daughter to tell what's going on and WHY the little mouse is saying "Sorry!" When I read it, I elaborate what the mouse is saying... ("Sorry ducky!" or "Sorry turtle!") and explain a little better what happened ("Uh oh! Ducky was painting a picture and the mouse got mud on it!"). But the dialogue in the book is equivalent to the other in the series, so I won't count that against the book. :) Really cute!

Peacegal says

I didn't really care for the story (why didn't Mouse wipe his feet instead of ruining all of his friends things?), but damn if I'm not a big sucker for a big-eyed cartoon mouse with a tear.

Another great book in the "Hello Genius" series. Squirt asks for this book all the time, says the "Sorry!" parts, and really enjoys participating in the reading.

Kathy Ellen Davis says

Poor little mouse!

I feel so bad for him.

But someone had to be the poster-animal for sorry.

Again, great illustrations.

A cute story.

A great way to learn the concept.
