The Watchman group is back again. What makes this novel special is that it is dedicated to a very brave American woman who was killed while trying to protect our country.

As an American, even one who has traveled out of the country and worked in the news media, it is very hard to comprehend the life that people in war-ravaged countries lead. The secrecy to do the things we take for granted like reading what we want, going to school, worshiping in our own manner. Most of us enjoy working in a environment where we are using our talents to benefit others in some way. We don't have to worry about walking across the street to visit friends or to go to the grocery store.

Whether it was Gerard de Marigny's intention or not, I came away from the book thinking more about the men and women who work so hard to keep us safe. I also thought of the men and women who are working to help bring peace to their countries for themselves, their children and their grandchildren. While I a grateful I do not have to live their lives, I am also very grateful that there are people who are willing to do whatever it takes to bring freedom to all.

Archangel: Mission Log # 1

This is the debut novella introducing a new series where Scipio, a character from the Cris De Niro Thriller series branches out as an advisor to the U.S. military on security protocols in Afghanistan.

His first outing doesn't go smooth at all. As soon as he arrives at Chapman Airfield he witnesses a terrorist attack and Scipio soon discovers that a former Taliban leader has returned and is plotting a major strike against a high profile American target.....

Fans of the Cris De Niro and the Watchman Agency will recognized Mr. de Marigny's unique style one that expertly fills page after page with spectacular action and hot suspense. Not a breather at all during the 113 pages of the book's length. Yes small but intense, well writing to captivate us, no unnecessary words to fill time and space and a wonderful hero to boot. What else do we want...
