The Emperor's Pet Guy Antibes

Please note: The ending has been modified from a cliffhanger to a transition.

On his way to return Shira to her home in Shinkya, Pol Cissert is called upon to solve two mysteries. His reward is something he has no desire for, but he must put that aside while he travels to the exotic and dangerous country of Shira's birth. He finds that deadly politics badgers him every step along his journey

Michael says

Great book up until the confusing/disappointing end...

(Spoiler alert... kind of)

I am not a fan of books that develop a man character over the course of a series and then introduce memory loss as a plot twist to redevelop the same character all over again. I typically find this to a cop out and was disappointed to see the author go this route at the very end of the book.

I also don't understand the actions of anyone at the end of this book. The main character is suspicious of being betrayed but leaves his main weapons behind? His alleged betrayers/saviors only recourse is to steal his memory and drop him in a foreign country? His companion (who can secretly talk to him without anyone hearing) is suspicious of potential betrayal but remains silent? I actually really enjoyed this book but the ending left me confused and disappointed.

For someone so smart Pol makes soo many mistakes and I felt like Pol didn't use some of his regular abilities just to prolong the story which is stupid. He falls for traps easily avoided by using his power.
