Jeffery Worrell says

I loved this book and all of the cool things that happened with the dog.

Melissa Namba says

Sometimes, I just say WTF to some of the things these kids do. What kind of hotel rents to a grip of children with a dog? The bicycle mystery has almost nothing to do with bicycles, except that they ride them. They find a rare dog and are focused on returning it.

Elevetha says

The Boxcar Children = most read series between the ages of 6 and 9 for me. I think of these fondly. Every child should read this series.

Seth says

I read just about every one of these I could get my hands on when I was a child. In my later teens, I picked up the series again to see what it was that I liked so much about the series. The answer: realistic characters, believable storyline, and a kind of summer escapist's daydream into some things that I may never do or experience as much as the boxcar children did. The characters in particular were well crafted. The villains always had a reason for their crime that seemed reasonable from their point of view (unlike the standard evil villain cliches seen in many childrens' mysteries). The Boxcar Children themselves appeared kind at heart yet at the same time weren't snobs either. I've definitely outgrown the series in terms of reading ability and criticism, but that doesn't stop me from recognizing good writing when I see it (I don't believe that Gertrude Chandler Warner actually wrote all of these books, but whoever continued in her stead was a good writer and emulator). This a great series for boys and girls alike still in grade school--books that are wholesome, yet interesting and enjoyable as well.

Shannon says

At about this point in the series, I noticed that the characters' clothing in the cover art was shockingly unstylish.

Ashle Oaks says

This was less of a bicycle mystery and more of a dog mystery. There were a lot of little mysteries in this book that made it hard to follow at times.

Kaetlyn says

I like that Henry and Benny found a dog and named it Shadow. I like how the Alden's find the dogs owner. I don't like that Smokey ran away. I like how the Alden's help people on their way to Aunt Jane's house.

Fantastical Geek (Atarashii Sekai) says

There's this Yorkshire terrier dog and they named it Shadow and they didn't know whose it was. They thought it was a stray, but it obeyed. But it didn't obey to stop whining because it whined all the time.

Tina Harden says

Any good deed doesn't go unrewarded. All the good deeds in the Boxcar Children Mystery Series are usually returned in kind. It may be in the form of tickets to a dog show or a free room, as in this title. Consistently throughout the series the Boxcar Children are rewarded with food.

In this story they meet Bulgarian businessman, Big Jenko, and is treated to a lunch of pilaf and four tickets to the big dog show. This title isn't as full of sabotage as some of the other titles but there are still some bad guys.

It is a good read. A little more relaxed feel than some of the others (The Mystery of the Hidden Beach and The Old Motel Mystery). The entire series of Boxcar Mystery titles are meant to be "easy readers" and encourage children to read more. I think it does that job in spades!

Maximilian Lee says

This book wasn't that good because it had several mysteries but the conclusions were all mixed up. I liked the part when the Alden's met Smoky the Skye terrier. I think the dog was very cute. (according to google)

Lauren says

There were fun elements to this book, and I can't really resent a read that only takes an hour. I've found that the closer together I read these, the more repetitive the stories seem to be. The dog was fun, and there bicycle adventure was moderately diverting. These would have been more fun to read as a child, but I still have such an affinity for the series that I'm going to finish this.

Haidyn says

Henry, Jessie, Violet, and Benny Alden, went on a bike ride to get to their great aunt's house.

On the way they found a lost animal and wanted to get it back to its owners. a man and a woman said they had stolen the animal, but the Aldens had to find this animal's home. but how? the Aldens are off on another live changing mystery.

Anna says

I wish we still had a society where four kids could spend a week bicycling to their aunt's house safely. :P

Caleb says

I liked Bicycle Mystery. It was where a dog would follow them everywhere. They finally found who owned it. And it was somebody they had helped, but they didn't know for a long time that it was their dog. And they had stayed in an old house and the dog had came to them.
