Ritesh Kukrety says

A short, delightful read. Simple prose, as befits a simple story. The twist at the end is pretty nicely done and gets the story a star more than I had initially planned.

Gary says

Jeffrey Archer is not my favourite personality but he is an excellent story teller. This book is only 12 pages long but the story is so well written.

This is a short story with a twist and 'A Wasted Hour' proved to be a very satisfying 10 minutes read.

It was boring.

This one was boring. Though the story had a good start but then it had lost its charm and ended on a boring note.

Sumit RK says

Just 12 pages & 2 characters and Archer weaves a story out of it like a master storyteller.

A young student hitch-hiking to college meets an old man with an incredible story to tell...And as usual with stories by Archer, the twist lies in the 'tale'.

I wish it could have been a bit longer but certainly worth a read.

Shirley Revill says

Random conversations

You meet unexpected people in the journey of life... Often the old people share their experiences in life. A good read...

I loved it!!! And that end! Oh my God!
Thans Hitessh for the recommendation!

Inderpreet Singh says

It was good, captivating read. Such a short story and so many things discussed makes you awestruck on the imagination of the author.

PS: It made me think to expand and make it a 900-page novel. ?

Excellent short story from a master of the art form. I remember reading “A sting in the tale” a collection of his short stories many years ago.

Since he has made an effort to allow readers more access to his back catalogue of short tales it would be a poor reader to dodge the opportunity to dip into these works. I think it will be like a bag of sweets with some noticeable favourites.

This is a great start; he tells of being too preoccupied by studies you fail to notice life passing you by along the way. Kelley, to counter this has always tried to hitch a ride back to college. Trouble is she has sensible rules to try to avoid difficult situations but you can never be too sure of who’s car you are getting a lift in.

The end took the cake for me. It wasn't at all what I was expecting. I am loving this short story spree I am on!
