Enchantress Lynne Ewing

Meri, Sudi, and Dalila are three girls who live in Washington, D.C., but have little else in common. Or so they think. When an ancient magic is revealed, so are their true identities as Sisters of Isis.

Fifteen-year-old Dalila has never lived a normal life. Homeschooled by her overprotective uncle, she's used to being different from other girls her own age. But not this different. Lately, Dalila has discovered she has magical powers of transformation and the ability to cast spells from the Book of Thoth. When Dalila commits a terrible mistake, however, she finds herself in a desperate race to control this powerful magic. Can a girl who's been so sheltered her whole life protect and entire world from the evil forces of chaos?

From Reader Review Enchantress for online ebook

Niela Sultana says

i just finished reading this book about 5 minutes ago and i think that it was my best book yet. this book is about a girl who learns to embrace the goddess within herself.

Meredith says

Such a quick read, full of dark magic and daring twists and turns. I look forward to the next and last book in the series.

Rachel says

I liked the character and there was a lot of action in between. Also it reminded me a lot of the story plot in the daughters of the moon series with Serena and Stanton.

Alex says

Still nowhere near as good as DOTM, but the story did pick up a lot in this book.

Faith says

I liked it. A few times it was boring but Ewing always managed to bring back the attention of the audience. Cannot wait to read the next one in the series #guiltypleasure

Katlyn says

In this book, the third of the series, they have to stop an Anicient Egyptian demon from taking over the world by going back in time. So they have to go to Ancient Egypt and stop him and the evil preist.

Lester says

For 'young reader fiction'..this trilogy was good. Small amounts of history interspersed wtih fantasy..easy to read..fun. Might inspire a younger person to read further into Egyptian mythology and history. I haven't looked yet..but there might be more books to come in this series.

Victoria says

Is a great book to read

Jolan says

I think i liked Lynn Ewing's other series better... the goddess of the moon series... these are alright though

Kristen says

I love this series and this book did not disappoint. I love the way it mixes action, love, and girlish high school nature all in one. Not to mention freaky egyptian gods.

Alisha says

This is the third book in the Sisters of Isis series. I loved this book. It is the continuation of the series. There isn't much about this series of books that I could say that I haven't said already. This is a good series. I love the way that the author wrote them. I love all the different characters that were created when she wrote this series. Though for this particular book, I like how this character, Dalila, has never lived a normal life to begin with, because her overprotective uncle telling her about her destiny from the beginning. But at the same time she has been sheltered and home-schooled and now she has to protect the entire world. I would recommend this book.

Jenna says

this book was really good but i was saddened by the end!

Alison says

This was a wonderful book that made me feel as if I was in the main characters body. I loved how the Egyptian mythology was used to create a climactic setting. I would read a chapter of this to older children in grades of fourth or fifth. I would use it to teach more about the historical beliefs of Egyptians.

If I could give this book a rating of less than 1, perhaps -5 or something, I would. I am not going to read any more books in this series. This one and the second one are beyond awful.

You have three slayer-type girls and their mentor is almost totally useless. The girls never use common sense or logic. They never plan ahead in a realistic fashion. They refuse to take the seriousness of their situation into account. They carry nothing that could serve as a physical weapon (physical weapons might not work against the main baddies, but they would very probably work against the humans who serve them.)

You have people commanding gods, and gods saying that they are not powerful enough to block other gods. Um, isn't a god by definition pretty much an all-powerful being? Would gods force people (like these three girls) to help them in the fight against evil? Wouldn't gods ask first?

Further, why young girls? Why not women who are at least in their twenties, who have matured somewhat and think a little straighter? The concept worked in Daughters of the Moon since there was a time-limit on when a Daughter would lose her powers or change, but in this series, there is no such time limit. Thus, there's no requirement for using relatively young girls.

The third volume opens with Dalila going outside, alone (a mistake), meeting an evil being and making an assumption he's just a tutor (another mistake), and finally managing to flee from him.

It seems this volume is starting off as bad as the second. Three girls who are totally clueless, who make no effort to prepare themselves physically against an enemy out to kill them, and who pay no attention to any rules of logic or common sense.

And, in one of the truly rare times I do this, I am not going to bother even finishing the book. It's a waste of my time to continue reading it, when I have so many other worthwhile books still waiting to be read.
