I enjoyed the story even with the twist and turns. I hope there are follow up books to tell about the other 3 sons

Good book. I loved seeing the evolution of Gabriel. He arrived in Union Junction planning to hide out for the year it would take to get the money his dad promised. Within an hour of arriving he had met Laura and felt the attraction to her. Then he met her kids, and discovered that maybe he was relationship material after all. I loved how quickly he fell for the kids. He also fell for Laura pretty quickly, though at first he simply planned to marry her to take care of her and the kids. Laura couldn't resist the man who took to her kids so quickly. She knew she had a good chance of falling in love with him, but didn't want to be disloyal to her late husband. She also wanted to help Gabriel repair his relationship with his father. I haven't decided yet what I think about Josiah. I really think the way he raised his sons was terrible. It made it difficult for Gabriel to recognize love at first, and made the Morgan boys becoming a real family that much more difficult. I did eventually like Laura's father, and his efforts to change were great for his family. I liked Gabriel's patience with Laura and her nerves about marrying him.

When Gabriel Morgan reluctantly agrees to go home to the place where his controlling father tried to raise his four sons, he knows he's being played, that he'll receive a million dollars if he stays for a year. No way does he want to do that, but the money is a draw for sure, if only because it will mean he can leave and go where he wants.

The trouble with that plan is the two darling children he sees in the arms of the young widow his father has gifted with money for college. Why would he do that? To feel like a doting grandfather? Not the image Gabriel has of his never-satisfied Pop.

Laura is charmed by Gabriel, but isn't interested in marriage. What she is interested in is a father-figure for her precious babes. So, you guessed it--they agree to an arrangement that quickly falls apart when they find themselves in bed together.

I love the new cover for this book. Harlequin has a new series called Home on the Ranch. This is the first time I've read her book and I enjoyed her writing. This is about a power struggle between a parent and his children in away. In this story I met Gabriel Morgan who has been tempted home by his father with a promise of 1 million if he stays for 1 year. But dad leaves a letter about a mom that needs help. He meets

Laura Adams who has a daughter and a son who isn't quite 1 year old. He is determined not to fall in love with Laura but he does offer a business proposition to marry for 1 year. The only only thing is he's falling for her and wants to make it forever. Laura has already had love with a very gentle guy so she's not used to Gabriel's style. He isn't one to show his emotion especially after the way his dad raised him. This book is a lot of fun to read. You get to meet 2 of his brothers and his dad. It keeps you hopping as to what is happening next. My next problem will be how to get the stories for his brothers for they sound real interesting. J

I enjoyed Texas Lullaby by Tina Leonard. This book is well written, with fun characters and drama. This is a fairly short read. Texas Lullaby is a complete story, not a cliffhanger.
