Nihareeka says

Full of positivity. The best part of the book was the ending. Though it has a pretty emotional upturn of events but the ending has been maintained to be a somewhat happy state. Amazing one! Must read.

Jonathan Langley's life takes a devastating turn when he turns blind. Once a successful painter and printmaker Jonathan becomes a recluse, angry with world. He then encounters a precocious 11r old Hispanic kid who lives next door and an unlikely friendship is formed. Her cheerful presence shatters his hardened exterior revealing the man he was before tragedy struck. He finds a fresh lease and perspective of life with Lupe leading him. He discovers the power of Kindness, compassion and love.

The book brings back a fragrance of Silas Manor. The narrative is flat and does not inspire the affirmations and the power of affirmations are lost within the meandering and predictable storyline, the haughty rich girl losing her wealth , the negative filled mother, the repentant father. Even the so called twist is a predictable one.

I found this story kind of strange, there didn't actually seem to be much of a story. There was stuff happening, but if you asked me right now to briefly describe the story, I really couldn't. Although, in all honesty, if you wanted it very brief? A man and a young girl become friends. That's pretty much it.

It was very strangely written. There were tiny little scenes with about 2 minutes worth of dialogue, so you were never really given any time to get into it before it switched again. Maybe this is why I find it difficult to pin down a story.

It was a decent enough read. If you're not too fussed on storyline or character development and just want a light read where you can switch off? Then I guess you might like this one.

A little sweet story, a chicken soup for the soul.

Una piccola e dolce storia che ti fa credere in un mondo migliore e pieno di speranza.

One interesting book on human relations (bonding), I read these days is the "Painting the Future". This is about a relationship that evolves between two neighbors. Jonathan Langley whose illness makes him live in darkness (he loses his sight due to illness), in his earlier days he was a successful painter and because of his illness he lives alone, but his neighbor Lupe makes him see the brighter side of life. Interesting book to enjoy. Happy Reading.
