No book has expressed life truer than this one. It made me wanna laugh; it made me wanna scream; it made me wanna cry. Haven't read a book as good as this in a while!

A youthful marriage frees Ann Pollock from an unhappy home life. While her mother-in-law doesn't initially welcome the shop girl her son loves, the thrifty bride soon proves her worth by supporting her in-laws after Phillip Coulter volunteers to serve in World War II. Crushed by the tortures of a Japanese prison camp, Phillip returns to civilian life to find his once-proud mother incapacitated by a stroke and his dreams of a bright future reduced to an ill-paying job as a law clerk. The birth of a daughter, Eva, brings joy to the Coulters, but as money worries mount, Ann takes a job in a real estate office despite her husband's objections. With each successful deal, the marriage becomes more hollow, and Ann is devastated when Phillip deserts her. Though a new love assuages her pain, that relationship disintegrates after a botched abortion leaves Eva sterile. The Coulters than reunite, and just when things start to work out, Phillip suffers a stroke, followed by Alzheimer's disease. The first third of the book offers a poignant look at an earlier era, but the constant catastrophes and labored solutions make the trials of Job seem minor...I loved this book so much....you just want to laugh, cry and be happy right along with Ann....

This book was an excellent tale of historical fiction. It was a wonderful read and clean. I was even able to recommend it to my 94 year old Mom.

Barbara says

A nice, easy read of one woman's struggles. Woman marries to leave a bad family situation with baggage that affects the marriage, husband has issues of his own, woman turns out to be stronger than her husband. How she deals with the hand she's dealt is the crux of the story.
