Sea Swept - 3/5 - I read this a long time ago and tried to re-read it. I was honestly surprised at how hard it was, given that I thought I'd really liked it last time. Not so much the second time through. So in a change of pace, it is three heroes that drive the trilogy, rather than heroines. Cameron is a reckless boat racer, whoring it all over Europe and then forced back to Bay area when his Dad dies. Then they inherit Seth - their Dad's adopted son and at last! a rebellious child (but we can see he really does have good heart and just wants to be loved, as all of Nora Robert's children do). And then Cameron starts putting the moves on the Social Worker and there is no other action here. No outside threat, no paranormal forces, just love, family bonding and whatever emotional issues each character has and those are the only sources of conflict. Oh and there is the mystery of where Seth came from, which while intriguing, is not enough to keep me going. Nora Roberts is just not a deep enough writer to pull this sort of story off well and keep me interested.

Rising Tides - 4/5 - Overall this wasn't my favorite series, but Ethan was my favorite character of all of the Quinn brothers. I like the quiet loner type with a lot of issues under the surface. Unfortunately I was disappointed in the romance part of this story. The chemistry wasn't all that great between Ethan and Grace and I'm never really a fan of the single mother characters in Nora Roberts books, because she makes them out to be too perfect as parents. And Seth, who started irritating me in the first book, continues to irritate me here. It's not that Seth is a bad character or anything, it's that Nora Roberts does not write well from the perspective of a child. I don't like how they turn out. But I give this 4 stars because I love Ethan and I'm so glad he worked through his problems and got his HEA (sort of).

This book had two different stories in it, but included the same characters. I had read the first as a separate book about 2 years ago, and I picked this book up about 4 months ago at the library for 50 cents. I just finished the second story. I enjoy Nora Roberts, and she didn't disappoint with the Quinn brothers. I appreciated the bond between the brothers.

Full review for Sea Swept now available on my blog:

I will say that I felt that Ethan got over his issues very quickly and the ending of Rising Tides came up too fast. I think that the issues Ethan had with his mother and himself were big enough that he really probably should have some form of therapy, because those feeling quite possibly would return.

Another good series by Nora Roberts and her on target insight into relationships. This one is about men and their needs and bonding from youth to adult. Explores how unhealthy parent roles can affect a child and how love can change this into positive areas. Good setting in the Chesapeake Bay and water life.

I loved every aching second of this book. I laughed and cried. I was beginning to miss Nora's writing the last 2 books were really bad. This book brought me back to why I loved her books. Great read

As much as this book was good to read, it started off really slow. I was ready to put it down but then after the first six chapters it starts to improve. It gets better at the end and you do look forward to the next book.

Sea Swept - Book One:

Cam and Anna are a great couple. Ever met those two people who seem to fight all the time but still love each other? That's them. And they have such fun doing it you don't mind watching. It's a great story of a man forced to care for a younger brother against his will, who falls in love both the boy and his social worker despite it all.

Rising Tides - Book Two:

Ethan is the quiet type who survived an horrific childhood, but now doesn't think he deserves a good life. Grace is the girl he fell in love with when she was too young for him, but now she is determined to make him admit he loves her. Another great read. It always reminds me of "The Heart of Devin McKade" - I'm not sure why, but the stories feel very similar, even though the specific details aren't.

This is one of my all time favorite trilogies ( well quads) she has done. It was very touching and believable. She even has a short story about the little boy's first christmas on her website. Very good books.
