Anusha says

I didn't like this too much because they found the Saxophone later than the show (but before the finals). They should have tried to find it before the show as it was the last show.

I have now spent enough time in children's libraries to know that this series is an EMPIRE with a truly stunning hold on young girls across the globe. I just wanted to know what the deal was!

It turns out that I am not able to access the headspace required to enjoy these books (I also probably should have picked one earlier in the series, I had no idea what was going on). But now I know what the deal is. The books and the art are as cute as they look on the outside. And it's nice that young girls of color can see fairies and girls that look like them.

I am also relieved to learn that Daisy Meadows is not one person, but rather four different women. The idea one ONE PERSON writing all those books (I practically have to catalog five new ones every month!) was kind of freaking me out.

This is the last book in a series of seven in the "Music Fairies" series by the group of authors who go by the name Daisy Meadows. It's a fun series, especially for young girls who are starting to read chapter books. Our oldest is addicted and I am encouraging it since I am confident that these books will help her develop a love for reading! She reads them on her own and will sometimes read aloud to me. I have been reading them along with her (at first I was irritated by them, but now they amuse me and they only take about 5 minutes to read). We will discuss the plots, her favorite parts and now that she's finished another set, which ones to read next. We've read through several of these series of books and our oldest is determined to read them all. I love it!

Rachel and Kristy go to the national talent competition. Jack Frost and his band are in it. One of the goblins is playing Sadie's magical saxophone. When Jack Frost is done performing, Rachel and Kristy pretend they're the makeup girls. When Jack Frost leaves to go practice, the goblin with the saxophone stays. Then Sadie makes magical cloth that makes the saxophone invisible. Kristy swaps it with the regular cloth. When the goblin polishes the saxophone with it, the saxophone turns invisible, so the goblin won't notice if Rachel and Kristy bring it back to Sadie the saxophone fairy.
