The Coravian Conflict Loren K. Jones

What do you do when there are no more challenges in your life? For Stavín Ne'Aniston Zel'Andral, the thrill of being a prince had rapidly paled. He was a prince of Evandia, but would never sit on the throne. He was the first person to earn the four hollowed stars of a Senior Warmaster, but was forbidden to participate in a war. He was a scribe who would never teach anyone but his own children. He was a scholar who didn't have time to research anything but trade.

All his hopes and dreams, his plans for the future, had fallen aside when King Kalin had adopted him. He would never be Master Scribe of the Kavinston Archive. Just eight years after the first time he'd joined the expeditions, he was finished. As Evandia's Minister of Trade, Stavín was tied up trying to manage Trade in general. Even his own House Kel'Aniston was out of his direct control. Of everything he'd wanted, only Shari and the children remained.

A distraction presented itself in the form of a request from the neighboring kingdom of Coravia for a Trade Delegation. Stavín decided to take his whole family along so they could see Coravia and Moravad. It would also allow him to introduce his family to their adopted cousins in Clan Zel'Darvin. After all, what could possibly go wrong on a simple Trade Delegation?

Book Five in the Stavín Kel'Aniston DragonBlessed series. Author's preferred edition.

Jeffrey A. Dewey says

Awesome

The books busting keep getting as the story line never really let's you know where it is heading but definitely keeps one's interest.

Victor G Robinson says

Another good read.

Mr Jones does it again and the bonus short story was frosting on the cake. Looking forward to the next in the seriesThanks

Douglas B. Hull says

Excellent

This series is one to reread over and over, strong main characters with a righteous since of what one should do. The stories are fresh and interesting. Not canned like some others.

Mike Goodman says

Darn Good Story

I really enjoyed reading this series. It is about a boy trying to impress a girl by going into a dragons lair to prove himself. The dragon is impressed so she bless him. On his triumphant return her father shames himself and has to summit his family to serve the boy who then cannot court a servant girl. Basically this is one of those careful what you wish for story.
