This is a subway read. Admittedly, taken from the 'giveaway table' at work. But if you care about who 'you are' or 'how you think'—synthesist, idealist, pragmatist, idealist or realist—it's not half bad.

Nick says

What a great little book! A must read for anyone who wants to think for themselves--especially writers, ministers, philosophers, etc. Definately worth re-reading periodically.

1. Make use of the little bits of time you have - eg: waiting at Dr. office. Always have a writing pad or good book.
2. Never read inferior books or books that don't interest you.
3. Make a list of great books that you want to read.
4. Only keep great books in your library
5. Only read what gives you the greatest pleasure
6. Do not read good books. Only read the best.
7. Never read; always study. Study nothing that does not interest you.
8. Whatever we read from intense curiosity gives us the model for how we should always read.
9. Sometimes you can read a table of contents to see what the book is about.

10. Sometimes you can get more of a friend's analysis of a book than out of direct reading.
11. Whatever we read we must first comprehend and when we have comprehended, criticize.
12. Acquire habit not to receive anything as true or beautiful, but consider everything as a problem.
13. Comprehension is criticism and criticism or judgment is a mere synonym for thought.
14. Treat newspapers as lessons in history. Just looking for business, society, sporting news will not teach you to think.
15. Put thoughts in writing. Don't depend on memory.

A quick but profound read. Docked a star off it due to the abysmal disregard of the author for fiction, which I found disagreeable and myopic, considering the erudite nature of the book.
