Any Day Will Do Sasha L. Miller

Sean is good at forgetting about things, so caught up in his painting that the rest of the world slips away. He's pretty certain he's done it again, because his boyfriend, Dustin, is dressed to the nines and ready to take him out to dinner. Whatever important occasion he's forgotten, Sean hopes it's not going to cost him the best boyfriend he's ever had.

This little short is just a few hours in the relationship of art student Sean, and his businessman boyfriend Dustin. Sean is the typical flighty artist. When Dustin arrives all dressed up with roses, Sean is sure he forgot something important, but Dustin tells him it's fine and they head out for a late dinner. Sean still feels that something is going on that he's missing, but Dustin is not upset. Sean has had unfortunate luck with boyfriends in the past who are less than patient with his artistic temperament.

They get to the fancy restaurant and when Sean opens the menu, he finally realizes the truth, it's Valentine's Day. He can't believe that Dustin didn't tell him, but he's told that as long as they spend time together, it doesn't matter the day. There is some reminiscing about how they met but I really would have liked to see more of them as a couple outside of the few hours they are together.

I wasn't sure if Dustin was that much older, or simply on a more "responsible" track in his life so he came across as much more mature. Sean admits that Dustin has more money which makes Sean a bit uncomfortable, and I got the impression he's waiting for Dustin to tire of him and dump him, but he also admires him and wants to do the right things to make it work.

So while it was cute, I didn't really feel I knew much about them or how they functioned as a couple beyond what I rather made up in my head. Sweet and romantic, but another thousand words might have helped me connect with them more.

This short story is part of the Less Than Three Kiss Me Quick Valentine's Day bundle.

Sean is a struggling art student, a painter who tends to get caught up in his art. For the last ten months he has been dating Dustin, a marketing director who makes good money. Sean is finishing a project for his art final when Dustin arrives, a bit later than usual. Sean is dismayed to see Dustin decked out in a beautiful suit, tie and carrying a dozen roses. Sean knows he must be missing something, it must be an occasion, but he can't figure out what it is. Dustin assures him, was just a meeting at work, but does want to take Sean to dinner. This is a very short story, so there isn't a lot of time to get invested in the characters, but I really just loved the complete acceptance and understanding Dustin had of what was important to Sean, and how he didn't take the absorption to mean a disinterest in Dustin. He considered it to be part and parcel of the man Sean is,

and loved him for that.

The story is sweet and pleasant, a quick escape into love.

Dustin is so sweet, and I'm glad Sean appreciates him!
But just a little more would have been great.

This is adorably sweet and doesn't try to be more than a short story. The MCs have been a couple for 10 months and all we get is one date that really matters. Took less than a 15 minute break to read, too.

A very short but extremely sweet little read.

Sean is adorably forgetful when he gets lost in his painting, and Dustin is the perfect boyfriend, reminding Sean in the nicest way to take a break from his art.

A lovely couple that I would love to read more of.

Recomended for romantics looking for a quick fix lol.
